strong perfume. It was so intense that little by little I started to dislike going to lessons. Around that same time, in third grade, I joined the school marching band and began playing the trumpet, so I eventually quit piano altogether.

At 13, I was in my first year of junior high school. For the first semester, I attended the local school where most of my elementary school classmates went. But my father changed jobs—from working at the Hongwanji headquarters to Principal at a high school—so starting in the second semester, I transferred to a different junior high school in the same city. Instead of joining the band, I played basketball. I ran about 10 kilometers almost every day and practiced hard for the tournaments.

But in Japan, junior high club activities usually end in the summer of the third year. By the time I turned 15, my basketball days were over, and I had just started playing bass guitar after being invited by a friend. I had listened to classical music, pop, and rock growing up, but the first time I heard heavy metal, it really shocked me. Since then, I've listened to all kinds of music—but even now, I still find myself going back to heavy metal.

So why did I begin by talking about these ages? Because 9, 13, and 15 were also important turning points in the lives of key figures in Jōdo Shinshū.

Shinran Shōnin, the founder of our tradition, entered the monastic path at age 9. It is said that Hōnen Shōnin—whom we refer to as the original master—began preparing for ordination at age 9 under his uncle, entered Mt. Hiei at 13, and was ordained at 15. Shinran Shōnin composed a verse on impermanence at just 9 years old, and Hōnen Shōnin was considered such a prodigy that by the age of 13 to 15, his teacher reportedly said, “There is nothing more I can teach him.”

Some of you may think, “That must have been so difficult—leaving their families at such a young age.” But Shinran Shōnin lost his mother around age 6, and his father left home to become a monk. Hōnen Shōnin is said to have lost his father—either at age 9 due to political conflict, or after his ordination—and his mother also passed away sometime after he left home.

In either case, both of them experienced the loss of their parents at a young age.

If they had been able to grow up peacefully with their families—learning court music or enjoying aristocratic pastimes—perhaps we would never have encountered the teaching of the nembutsu as we do today. When we think about it this way, even the things we now take for granted may be supported by someone’s deep sorrow or great sacrifice.

In his major work, the Kyōgyōshinshō, Shinran Shōnin explains what is known as the “transition through the three vows.” These are the 18th, 19th, and 20th Vows—often called the three vows related to birth in the Pure Land. Shinran Shōnin describes his own path as transition from the way of self-powered practices (the 19th Vow), to self-powered nembutsu (the 20th Vow), and finally, through the guidance of Hōnen Shōnin, entering the path of Other Power nembutsu (the 18th Vow).

Looking back on his life, Shinran Shōnin came to realize that even his earlier self-powered efforts were part of Amida Buddha’s working—guiding him toward the path of Other Power. Perhaps this is something that applies to our own lives as well.

As I mentioned before, this year marks 30 years since my ordination. It has also been 24 years since I received the qualification to become a resident minister in the Hongwanji tradition, and I am approaching the 25-year milestone. At the same time, it has been 25 years since my mother passed away.

Shortly after my mother’s passing, my father encouraged me to pursue that qualification. Perhaps he himself was struggling with the sudden loss, or perhaps he felt the need to prepare the next minister as soon as possible. If my mother had still been alive, I might never have taken that path. I might never have come to the United States as a minister. And if that were the case, I would not have met all of you.

When I reflect on this, I feel that each event and encounter in our lives arises from truly inconceivable causes and conditions. Even my mother’s passing may have been part of Amida Buddha’s working—guiding me to live the life of the nembutsu.

Of course, loss is painful and difficult. But now, I am able to receive even that experience as a deeply meaningful connection. I believe that each of you has also experienced moments that changed your life. Perhaps those moments, too, became the conditions that led you to encounter the teaching of the nembutsu.

I hope we can continue to walk each day, treasuring the connections we have been given.

President’s Message

We have had dear friends pass away which have profoundly affected the lives of family and friends; and we have had medical occurrences that have also affected the lives of our members and their families. Some of which are temporary and some that have permanently altered their lives. In both cases, these occurrences occurred in the blink of an eye, changing their lives in the here, now and days to come. You just never know what lies ahead; therefore, please remember to take the time to stop, appreciate, and enjoy being in the present with your loved ones.

Welcome to New MBC Board Member

At our last Board Meeting on March 22nd, Janelle Sasaki was nominated and elected as an MBC Board Member at large for 2026. On behalf of the Board of Directors, I would like to welcome Janelle to our temple family. Although Janelle has resided in Japan for the past 15 years, she continued to be a member of MBC and provided her support from afar. She currently resides in Honolulu, HI and continues to support MBC by representing MBC at the BCA National Council Meeting this past February, assisting us in pricing for the Japanese Vintage Sale, and by attending our Board Meetings via Zoom. We look forward to having Janelle a part of the MBC Board and a part of the vision for the future of our temple. Welcome aboard, Janelle!

Pond and Garden

March Notes

BY JIM EDMAN

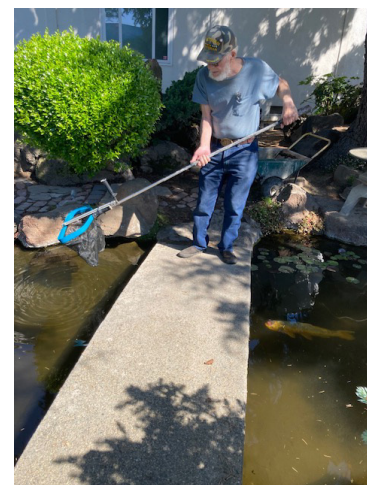

Our Kingfisher was here this morning. I haven't seen him in a while. One of our Doves is also here and he seems quite busy. I almost thought he was going to come up to me, but he is back up in the tree now.

I made an attempt to clean the waterfall. I got some of it, but the string algae is holding on too hard. I'm going to have to wait until conditions are working with me. I have managed to get 4 carts of muck out; however, I have curtailed that project for now as I need to mend the muck net. It needs to be flushed out after every use, but you can never get everything. The net is attacked by some kind of organism which eats holes in it, and just to sew it doesn't work. I'm thinking of cutting an old sock and overlaying the large holes until I can get a couple more nets.

That didn't work. The sock was too absorbent and muck got trapped behind it. I did manage to get 1 more cart of muck out, but that project is on hold until I can get the proper replacement nets!

We have a few Lilly blooms. The pads are still in the process of forming. Yesterday we had a group of Blackbirds checking things out. They are gone now but I assume they will be back with a whole bunch of their buddies.

I went to Gaiser Pets to see Jeff. He helped me tremendously with the pond years back when I first took it on. He gave up on his pond years ago as it took up too much of his time. I was hoping he could come up with replacement nets for the mucker that I originally purchased from him. The answer was no. That company no longer carries them. He did find another ultra fine net on the internet at Amazon, and I purchased 2 of them. They are designed to slip on to swimming pool skimmer poles, but I was able to modify our muck pole to accept them. The nets were only rated for 17 pounds but should now stand 40 pounds. Over the years I've gotten to where 20 pounds is totally acceptable. It looks good and should work fine. I'll find out in a few days.

It's early evening and I am hosting the Girl Scouts. It is a touch windy and a lot of Pine needles are in the pond. The pond looks like it is struggling. By all rights, it should have the next larger size pump, however, that would involve more work.

Once the sun gets lower in the sky and the pond gets shade everything seems to relax and the Koi get more active.

Everything is OK

MBC Japanese Vintage Sale

The MBC Japanese Vintage Sale held on March 28th & 29th was a very successful event! We received so many wonderful donations from members and friends of the temple. A heartfelt thank you to all those who have donated their family treasures for this event. Many of your treasured items found loving homes. All of the proceeds went into the General Fund which helped fund the repair and upgrade projects of the temple facilities. Keep an eye out for future MBC Japanese Vintage Sale opportunities!

A huge thank you to all of the volunteers for making this such a successful event! Thank you for all your help with setting up, unpacking, sorting, dusting, displaying, pricing, greeting, selling, cashiering, packaging, wrapping, boxing and clean up!
